We shall not calculate the number of days which the Russians can arrive at Berlin, as many allied critics did in 1914. But we shall note that the war of two fronts has again become a reality, that the enemy, while involved in severe fighting in the West, has found himself attacked on the East, and has already suffered severely.

There are several points in this series of battles which will be noted with satisfaction by the Allies. The conduct of the Russian soldiers seems to have borne out the predictions of a deterioration in quality following on the extension of the war limit. The best troops having been sent to Italy those left on the defensive have proved inadequate for their work. The German reinforcements dispatched to help Austria on the Rye have been unimpaired, thereby supporting a suggestion of Colonel Repington and other critics that the German troops now in reserve are by no means up to the old standard. The effect of this advance, however, will probably be unnoticed. The Austrian report shows that the only reference made to it in Vienna is to a small portion of the fighting near Chernowit, where the Russians, owing to the nature of the country, were held up for some time. In Berlin the news will not be allowed to interfere with the rejoicing at the great victory won by the campaign for a new loan. But it will be impossible to conceal the effect of these Austrian defeats on the armies engaged on the West, at Ypres, at Verdun, and on the Italian front. The events of the next few weeks should tell the allied commanders what influence in their major purpose the Russian advance has on the final course of the war. Have they so discouraged the plans of the Allies that they cannot attack at their chosen moment? Have they so depleted the numbers of the enemy that he cannot remove troops from one point without exposing himself to a successful attack on another? In their major purpose the Russian advance has certainly failed. They have not brought a separate peace with France appreciably nearer, and they have not prevented the British taking over their share of the line. They hoped to accomplish the first of these objects before the Russians attacked, and they now see that they cannot do so. All that remains for them to do is to keep troops at the positions which, in their opinion, should be the starting points of the allied offensive. They will attack with an added fury at Ypres and at Verdun, and with their seal quickened by this further proof of the need for a quick decision.

"AFTER A WEEK."

Mr. Holman is strangely solicitous to carry out the bidding of the people. "We will respect the decision of the public" on the subject of the liquor referendum, says the Premier, and then he adds, as it were, parenthetically, "after a week." His friends, the publicans, are to have a week to think the matter over, for has the Premier not publicly informed them that he has instructed the police to treat all breaches of the law with kindly indulgence for a period of one week? The publicans have had a nasty knock, and perhaps he feels that sympathy is due to the honest retailer of spirits who has had his business interfered with in the public interest. If the Premier is to be over-energetic for a week, no one would have any the wiser. It is, however, quite another thing for the Premier to practice a policy of leniency for a week, and then to revert to his old policy of severity. It is not fair to assume that after all the excitement of the referendum Mr. Holman was not over-careful in his selection of phrases, and that he really did not mean precisely what he said. Whether the Premier regards the result of the referendum as a defeat for the Government or not is scarcely worth discussing. He cannot well look upon it as a victory, and he cannot well look upon it as a defeat. He is in a very awkward position. He has already had one pitiful example of governmental waste of money. What Parliament was told for the purpose of the referendum was to do at great expense. Are we to have a repetition of this? The Government, it is well known, is in vain looking to London for money. Even if the people sanctioned the absorption of the liquor trade by the State, where are the millions of capital to be used for the purpose? The Government is in a very awkward position. SALVATION ARMY. WORK OF THE YEAR. PRAISED BY CHIEF JUSTICE.

An indication of the nature and extent of the work of the Salvation Army in Australia during the past year was given by figures quoted in the Town Hall last night by the Commissioner James Hall. The occasion was the annual dinner of the Salvation Army, which was held at the Town Hall last night. The Commissioner James Hall, who was present, and who was assisted by the Mayor, the Chief Justice, and other dignitaries, gave a report on the work of the Army during the past year. He stated that the Army had been successful in its work, and that it had been able to secure the co-operation of the public in its efforts to help the poor and the distressed. He also stated that the Army had been successful in its work, and that it had been able to secure the co-operation of the public in its efforts to help the poor and the distressed.

DUBLIN REBELLION. EYE-WITNESS'S GRAPHIC STORY.

A graphic story of the fighting and the Dublin rebellion is told by an eye-witness in the London "Daily Telegraph." The story is told by a man who was in Dublin during the rebellion, and who saw the fighting from the inside. He describes the fighting as being very fierce, and as being very bloody. He also describes the suffering of the people of Dublin during the rebellion, and as being very great. The story is a very graphic one, and it is a very interesting one to read.

MISSIONARY LEADER. DEATH OF DR. R. W. THOMPSON.

A great leader in the missionary movement has passed away in the person of the Rev. Ralph Wardlaw Thompson, D.D., whose death was announced by cablegram in yesterday's "Herald." He succeeded the late Dr. Joseph Mullens as foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society in 1881, and continued to act in that capacity until, when he retired from active service. He still continued, however, to take a lively interest in the work of the society, and was always ready to give his advice and help on any matter of importance that might be brought under his notice. Dr. Thompson was born in Scotland in 1837, and was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He was a man of great energy and of great ability, and he was a man of great influence in the missionary movement.

BOTANIC GARDENS. TO-DAY'S CENTENARY.

The celebrations of the centenary of the Botanic Gardens will take place to-day. The gardens were founded in 1816, and to-day marks the hundredth anniversary of their establishment. The gardens are one of the most beautiful and most interesting places in Sydney, and they are a great source of pride to the people of the city. The gardens are home to a large number of rare and beautiful plants, and they are a great place to visit for anyone who is interested in botany. The gardens are also a great place to visit for anyone who is interested in the history of the city, as they were founded by the first Governor of New South Wales, Sir James Macarthur.

CATHEDRAL STREET. PROPOSED CLOSING. LAND BOARD'S INQUIRY.

The inquiry into the proposal to close the Cathedral Street, from the intersection of the street with the railway line to the intersection of the street with the Sydney Harbour Bridge, was held yesterday. The inquiry was held by the Metropolitan Land Board, and it was attended by a large number of people who were interested in the proposal. The Board heard evidence from a number of witnesses, and it will now have to make a decision on whether or not the street should be closed. The proposal to close the street has been made by the Sydney Harbour Bridge Trust, and it is a proposal that has been the subject of a great deal of controversy. The Trust claims that the closure of the street would be necessary in order to ensure the safety of the bridge, and it claims that the closure would also be necessary in order to ensure the smooth flow of traffic on the bridge.

NOTES AND COMMENTS. The report of the Commonwealth Auditor-General on the Federal accounts for the year ended March 31, 1916, has been published. It shows a total revenue of £1,000,000,000, and a total expenditure of £1,000,000,000.

At the wool sales yesterday grey merino sold to 25s, and secured to 34s, both records of the season so far.

A strong demand existed for all free, shaggy merino at prices 10 to 15 per cent. above last year's.

Best crossbreds were 10 to 15 per cent. dearer. Toplines of seconds were 10 to 15 per cent. up.

Offerings comprised 818 bales, and including private transactions, 13,545 bales were sold.

THE MARKETS. A dull day made dull business in all markets. The wool market was particularly dull, and the price of wool was 10 to 15 per cent. below last year's.
